MONDAY MORNING, DECEMBER 24, 1860.

The proclamation of President Buchanan, for a National Fast, is of course a subject of derision to the infidel organs of a party which is the most fanatical party on all religious and political subjects that ever existed, and which professes to be wholly actuated by religious scruples and a regard for the "higher law" of God. In times of great individual and national distress, the heart of man turns naturally to God as its only hope and refuge, and this is, with few exceptions, universally true, no matter how some, from false shame, may endeavor to conceal their religious sentiments, and others, from that hypocrisy which is more characteristic of infidels than believers, may deny their existence. It is right and proper that President Buchanan should call upon the nation, at this most critical and ominous period, to give expression to this universal natural sentiment; that he, the Chief of the Republic which now seems on the verge of shipwreck, should lead the people to the footstool of the only Power which can save us in our great necessimade similar recommendations, as have all the governments of the civilized world from

ty. Other Presidents, in seasons of national calamity, such as the cholera, &c., have time immemorial. What an impressive spectacle was that presented in St. Petersburg, some years ago, during a terrible visitation of cholera, when the Czar Nicholas at the head of his people, kneeled in one of the public places, and himself led their homage to the King of Kings, beseeching him to withdraw his heavy hand, and to spare an afflicted nation. Contrast such a spectacle, the most majestic man of all Europe at that day, both in mind and body, and the absolute ruler of sixty millions of the human race, with his hand upon his mouth, and his mouth in the dust, acknowledging the greatness of Almighty God, and imploring His chattering newspaper infidels, his lips running over with senseless gibes at all outward recognition of that Being whom, in his inmost heart, he dreads with unspeakable dread, and, at such a time as this, with a powder magazine beneath him, scattering abroad firebrands, arrows and death. These men, it is to be presumed, are blind to those ap- plete and shown with pleasure. palling dangers which are evident to all other eyes, and, in any event, anticipate entire personal exemption for themselves, or their terror would be as extreme as their irreverence, in their fancied security, is extraordinary and disgusting. From the sneers of such men the patriotic and the good may derive new in- and good quality and no mistake centives to hope and confidence. When David, flying from Jerusalem, was reviled, and cursed by Shimei, said Abishai unto the king, "Why should this dead dog curse my lord the king? let me go over. I pray thee, and take off his head," David replied. Let him alone. It adds: "It will be seen that the Convention studiously abstained from doing more than state to the Conference the condition of the Church, and deckers that separation is absolutely required to give peace and prosperity to our societies. The Convention suggests no form of separation, and intimates no preference for any plan of fature constitution. The general opinion of the Convention favored a separate organization, but while the delegates believed themselves to be authorized to give the preachers information with regard to the mind and state of the gains, at No. 64, King-street. our societies, they did not think that their province extended for the preservation of province extended for the received the following province extended for the received th province extended further." Resolved, That the members of the Baltimore Annual Conference be requested to assemble at Staunton, on Monday before the session of the Conference, that they may have time to determine upon their action in reference to the proceedings of this Convention before the opening of Conference.

The object of this resolution is understood to be to avoid the difficulty of having the Bishop of the Church as Presiding officer during the determination of Church rela-

Hon. Joseph W. Taylor, of Alabama, makes the following recommendation:

"First, let the people of each Southern State meet in Convention at their respective State capitals, adopt a platform expressive of their purposes and wishes in the present crisis, a copy of the proceedings of each Convention to be sent to the Governor and Legislature of every State in the Union.

"Next, let the people of all the Southern States meet in Convention and adopt a platform which shall set forth explicitly all we have to demand of the people of the North, a copy of the proceedings of the Convention to be sent to each Northern State, with the request that their people meet in Convention to consider our demands."
